

PEGASUS

To Marc
How's the cottage?
Yok, yuk, yuk!!!

Marc:
To a great night and home. Love
Dana

Marc, we are will sure we are at Centennial, hope ya have a good time. Well good what can it say,
Your friend
Dana

Marc:
We'll have to party
out in Belle River
again okay!
Keep partying
& stay the way you are!
Love Wilma

Pegasus

Marc:
You're one of my sweetest friends
I'll always love ya!

ADMINISTRATION

ALISON WAGNER

Mr. McCullough

Caught loitering again.

Who us?

Just hanging around.

A course change? Of course not.

I'm dropping Chemistry. So there!

Hey, Boyd! Where's my morning coffee?

I'm Chipper. I know the answer.

I taught him everything he knows!

Principal

MR. D. MALLENDER

MR. P. VALENTINE

Vice-Principal's Message

"Communication" among people is essential in making a school such as Vincent Massey a successful one. Without it, the efforts of students, parents, and staff would be an exercise in futility.

Through the years, our school has worked hard to establish a fine tradition based on communication and co-operation.

If you are to be successful in your own lives, the development of a positive attitude and an understanding of people will also take you a long way. I have seen many Massey students practise these objectives and, as a result, they have been rewarded with many pleasant experiences and memories to carry with them upon graduation.

It is my hope that what you have learned as graduates, and will continue to learn as undergraduates, will assist you in your quest for a happy life.

Learn to "communicate" and this goal should become a reality.

*P. Valentine
Vice-Principal*

Wanna see me dunk?

For my next trick...

This way to West Virginia.

I'm going home to mother!

The Young and the Restless

Another 200. Coach?

And second runner up in ...

Beth goes back to nature.

How come I didn't get perfect?

Roses don't taste as good as they smell!

TRAPPED!

A Star is born.

I'm so photogenic!

Wait 'til I get my hands on you!

Monday morning at Massey.

Wanna swing with me?

Anybody want a baby?

You gonna leave me here?

What an angel!?

Guess who?

Pucker up!

Hooray, Stan's not here!!

Do I have to jump in, Jock?

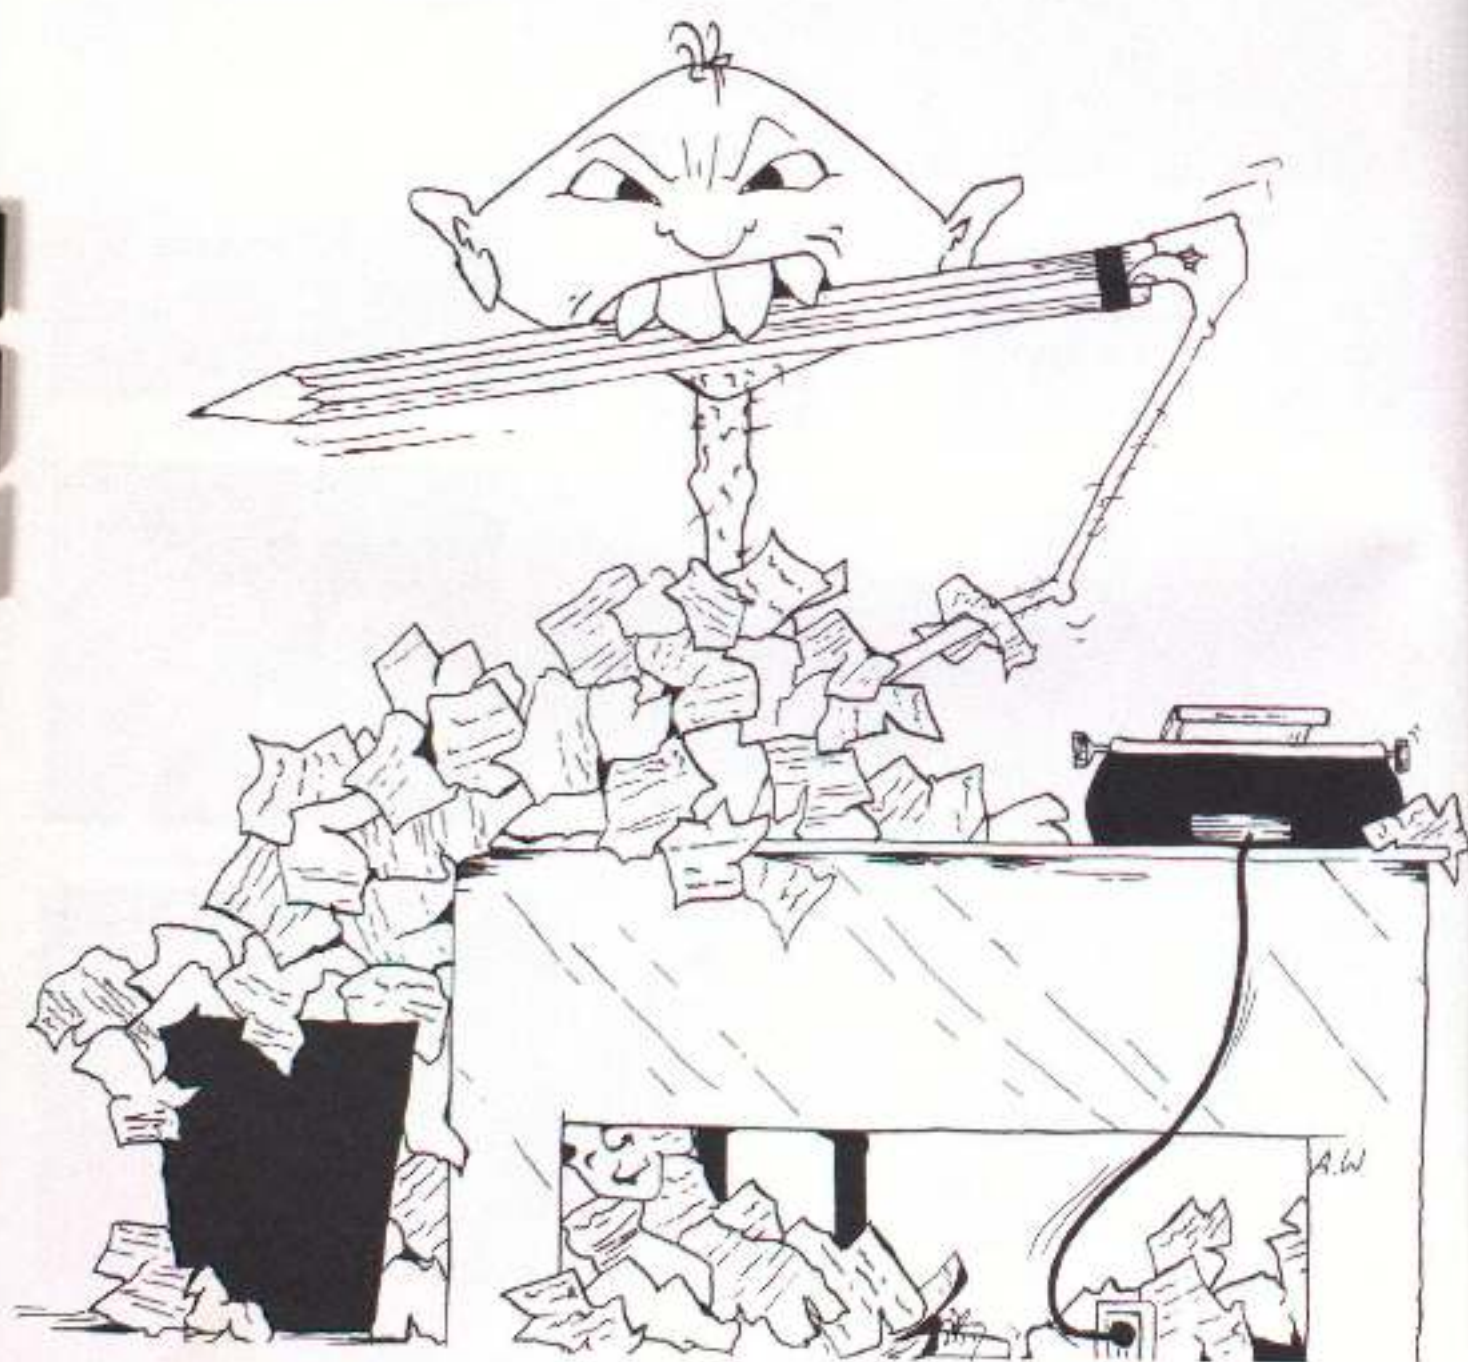

Hi there, cutie!

Oh' she's crabbin' again.

LITERARY

DESOLATION

*Search again the dark corridors of your mind,
The empty waste-lands that lie dormant and still.
What you find there is nothing but a vacuum, empty and void,
And the direction of your destiny and purpose of life points nowhere.*

*Are you to be like dust scattered by the wind
Or like memories drifting off to oblivion?
Those forgotten for but a moment, then gone for eternity.
As you lie in a seething pit of gutless self-pity,
You fail to see the gracious hands of love stretched out to you,
And you slowly die from the poison from within.*

Leo Ogata

THE JOURNEY

The luggage had been checked and was even now being flung into the dark, airless bowels of the aircraft.

A brightly hued ticket wilted limply as she clutched it tightly in her moist clenched fist. Her parents were there. The quiet non-descript man who was puffing his way through the second pack was her father. Her mother, a trim, forceful woman, smouldered beside him. The three stood together, yet were somehow apart, as they waited.

The loud-speaker crackled and they sprang to attention, straining to hear the synthetic voice over the hubbub of the melee. The system was terribly static and so the announcer seemed to stammer. When they finally comprehended the disjointed announcements, they realized that this was the flight, number five-o-two, boarding at gate nine.

They walked with her to the gate where they bade her a distant and hurried good-bye. Peering through the smeared glass divider, the two watched her as she was checked for concealed weapons. The green light flashed on and she was allowed to pass through.

She vanished up the rampart as if being inhaled by a huge vacuum which would deposit her in its source. A slender stewardess, heavily made-up to hide her poc-marked complexion, greeted her with a pleasant smile as she stepped on board. Glancing at the proffered ticket, she indicated the location of the corresponding seat. The girl was politely packed into this seat which was next to the window.

She lifted the plastic shade and gazed out upon the great, silver expanse of the wing. She felt someone sit down beside her, but she continued to stare at the ground, so soon to be abandoned for the clouds.

She fastened her seat-belt as the engines started and the warning lights flashed on. "No Smoking" and "Fasten your seat-belts" glowed in small, neat letters above her head.

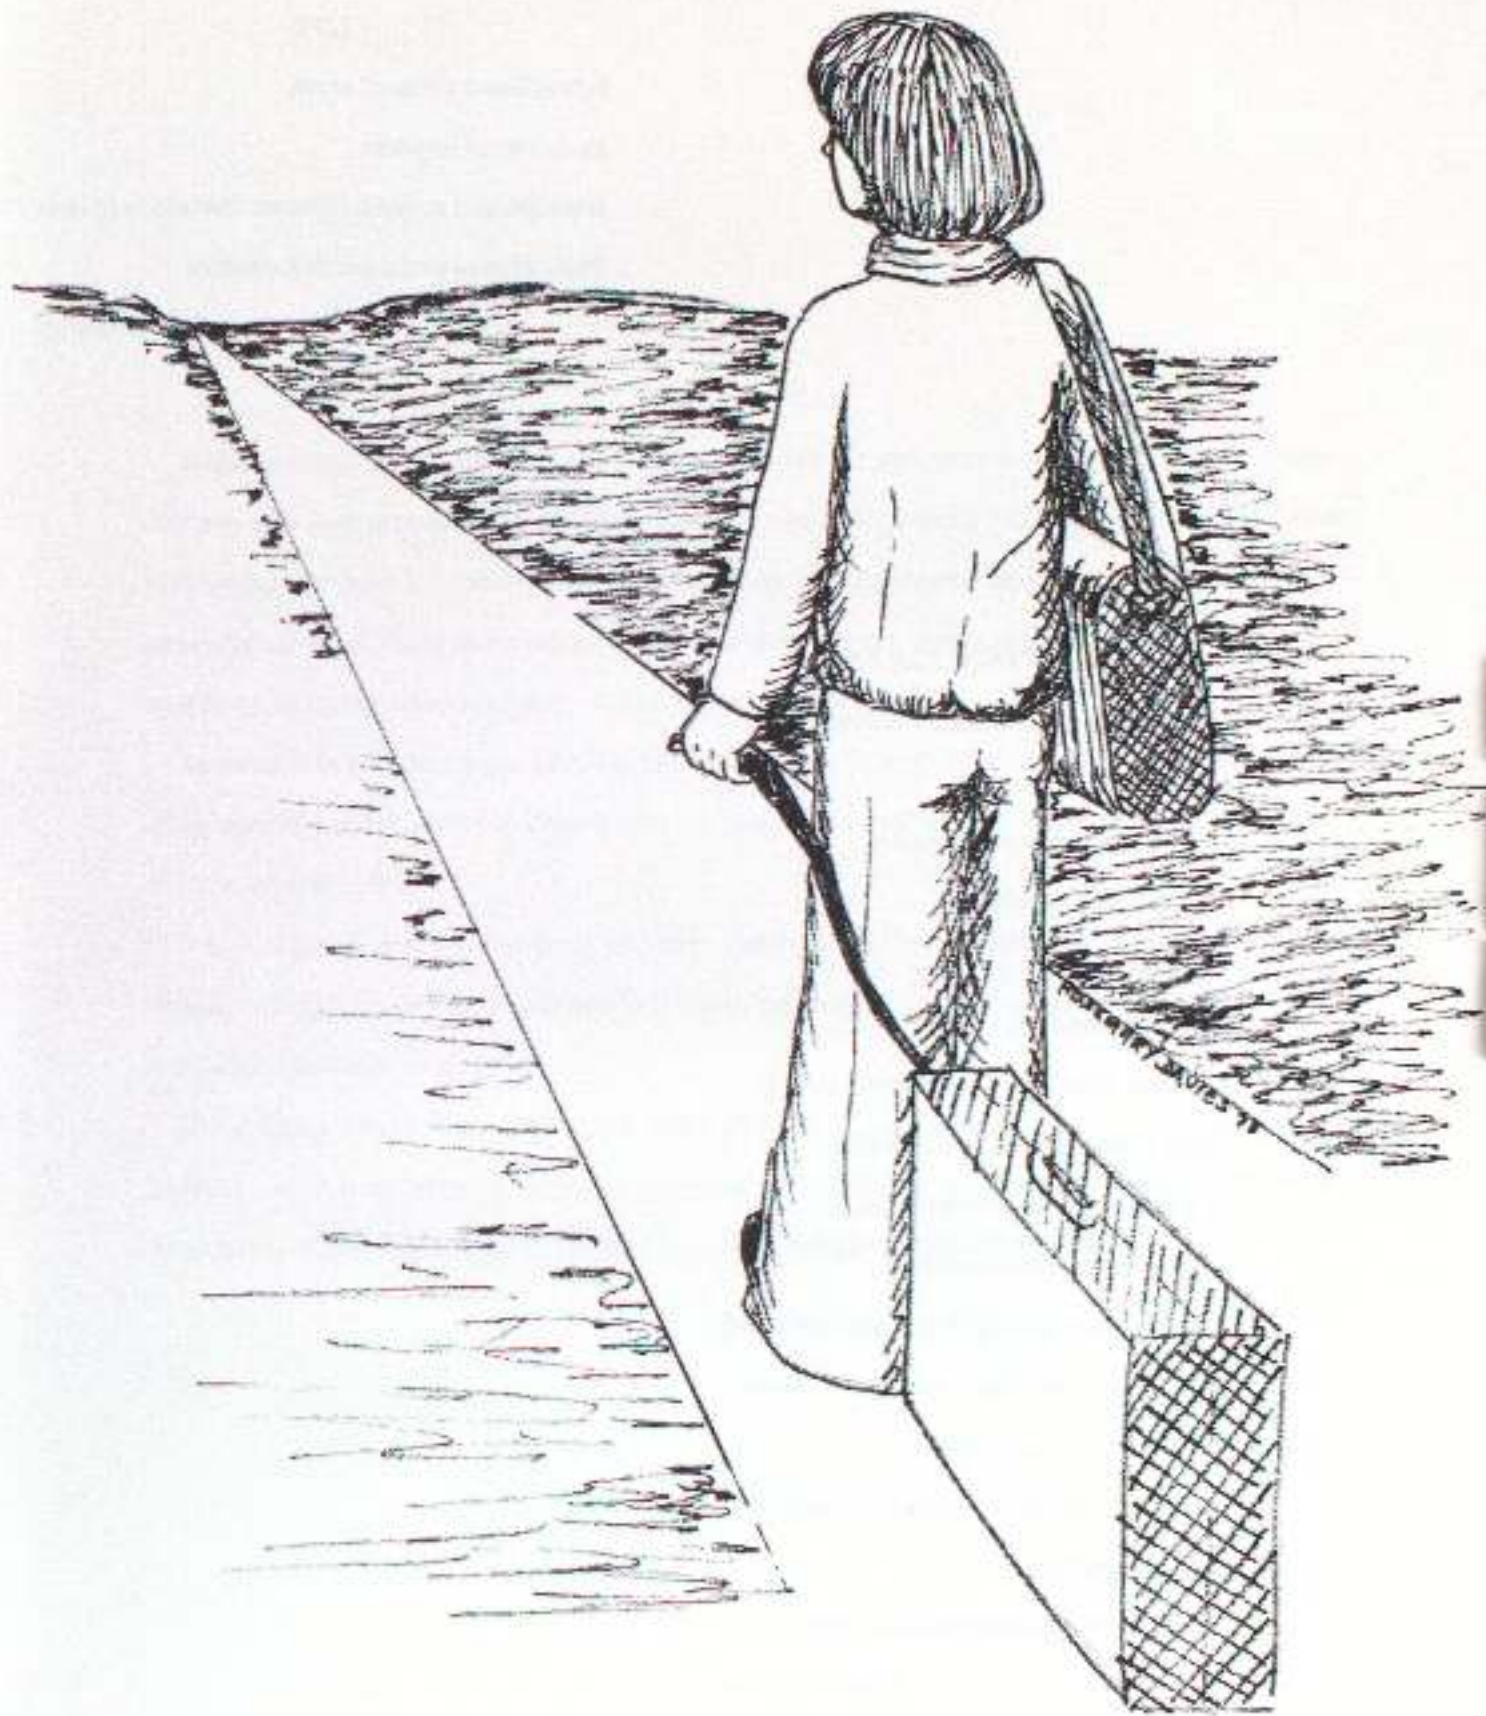

The plane jerked into motion, swung around slowly and taxied to the runway. There was a temporary halt and then the great craft moved out onto the runway. The engines roared and the speed increased; the runway lights flashed past in a jumble of brilliant colours.

Suddenly, contact was broken. She was pressed back into her seat as the plane nosed upwards. They were airborne.

She smiled and settled in for the trip, watching through the window as the cloud ceiling was approached, broken through, and finally spread beneath them in a panorama of mountains and valleys.

She was content, ignorant of the fact that her seat-mate had a mission to fulfill before they reached their destination, and a bomb in his flight bag.

LIFE

*Life is like a grain of sand
Its cycle is the same
It whips and covarts through the winds of time
Then settles to the earth forgotten.*

Debbie Radics

MAD HATTERS' TEA PARTY

*"So peaceful before they came."
I thought,
Staring moodily at the water,
While beside me they Whined.
The warden said,
"Emma, don't suck your teeth, dear!"
And Emma said "Halloo. Halloo,"
Laughing loudly at the ducks.
Another glared vacantly,
Ice-cream dripping from a palsied hand,
While her neighbour rocked, crooning,
"What does Lizzie want?"
And the last girl huddled on the grass,
Never said a word
And just looked accusingly at me.*

POVERTY

Walking down the street as usual, I met a man. Not an ordinary man. Not an ordinary man, but one who had attempted and failed; someone who had actually put forth an effort and was still trying. He had a face of deep crevices, lines of experience and the expression of past strength. At first, I had even mistaken him for the vagrant, the scum that littered the streets and lived off our hard-earned dollars. No, he was different.

As he held out his hat, I thought maybe I was wrong. I studied him again, and I had to reach deep into my pocket and even deeper into my heart. As I hesitantly pushed my crisp dollar into the hat, I fell through.

It was dark. There were ghostly screams and fighting, but where were the people? I saw disease, hunger and living conditions that made my stomach turn. They needed help, and there was none. Now they were gone.

The old man's eyes shone with hope, and I glanced at him again, as I donated another bill. I hurried away and, when I turned the corner, I could not escape his haunting presence. Regardless of how hard I tried, I could not erase his purpose from my mind.

FIRST MEETING WITH A LONDON CELEBRITY

*You're so tall I said
To you, standing serenely
On the river bank. But hallo
Anyway, and how nice to see
Your smiling face after all I've heard.
We laughed together then, I
Quietly inside you in musical
Bellows, and briefly I was the only one,
You need a wash, I thought, but what*

*An upright carriage and artist hands.
Now more than friends, we watched
A borge sail past.
I must go now, I said
Regretfully, and as I left
You called after me -
Will you be back?
Oh yes, Big Ben,
I will!*

HARRY

Two o'clock on a sweltering July afternoon. A persistent sun burns its way into the brick office building. In keeping with the heat, typewriters slow down their pace and the line at the water cooler lengthens. Arms are unstuck from papers and pens released from sweaty hands for exclamations of "God, it's hot" and "Why don't they close this place?" A few feeble fans try to cut through the stagnant air.

Inside a small room, someone is coming apart. Unknown to his fellow inmates, Henry Smith is about to make an important decision.

He has been there for some time. It shows in his sparse greying hair and tired eyes; his worn-out cheap office furniture. Thirty years of pulling and scrotching and where is he? - Just another insect in the corporate jungle. Twenty years of working his "butt off for this lousy company"; as he liked to say, and what does he have? - An insulting tiny office with a plastic name-plate, a dinky little house in pre-war suburbia and an ex-wife he wants to blame but can't.

It's never really seemed a rat-race to him. He's stepped on no heads; done nothing outside the law. The hardships are pretty well what he's expected. But how did he end up here? He's "yessirred" and "sorry-dear-I-have-a-meetinged" a good part of his life away. What of that? So have the others. But why aren't they here? Where is Harry's pot of gold?

Is it the past so quickly spent or is it the frightening future, the empty void, that scares Harry so much?

Perhaps the thought possessing him today has always dwelt somewhere in his subconscious. Perhaps that rubber band of sanity has always been waiting to break. No matter.

A strangely refreshing breeze parts the curtains and fills the room. Harry is gone.

Jim Hamilton

Engines roar;
Metal vibrates;
Dirt will soar,

The flag is dropped -
Tires spin;
Engines scream;
The race begins -

In the first turn
The trouble starts
When tires and bars interlock.

Men go down;
But not losing rate, they
Remember the drop of the starting gate.

They get back up and Rejoin the race,
Moving forward at a startling pace.

Passing riders right and left;
Make a turn, you're in the stretch.

Sweating and moving as fast as you can,

Taking the checkered and the race is done.

For another week you've had your fun.

Chris Nantau

'Twas the Night Before Finals

*'Twas the night before finals and all through that home,
Sat unprepared Sam, by his books, all alone.*

*He looked first at his watch, and then at the wall,
Wondering how long he could procrastinate and stall.*

*Hour upon hour, he sat there and contemplated;
Wondering just when his subject would be extricated.*

*This thought never left him as he simmered and stewed—
And when he next glanced at his watch, 'twas a quarter past two.*

*He figured, "I've studied enough for the night;
So he went to his bed, just to add to his plight.*

*Into the classroom the next morning he walked, feeling sound;
But he knew nothing of the difference 'tween adverb and noun.*

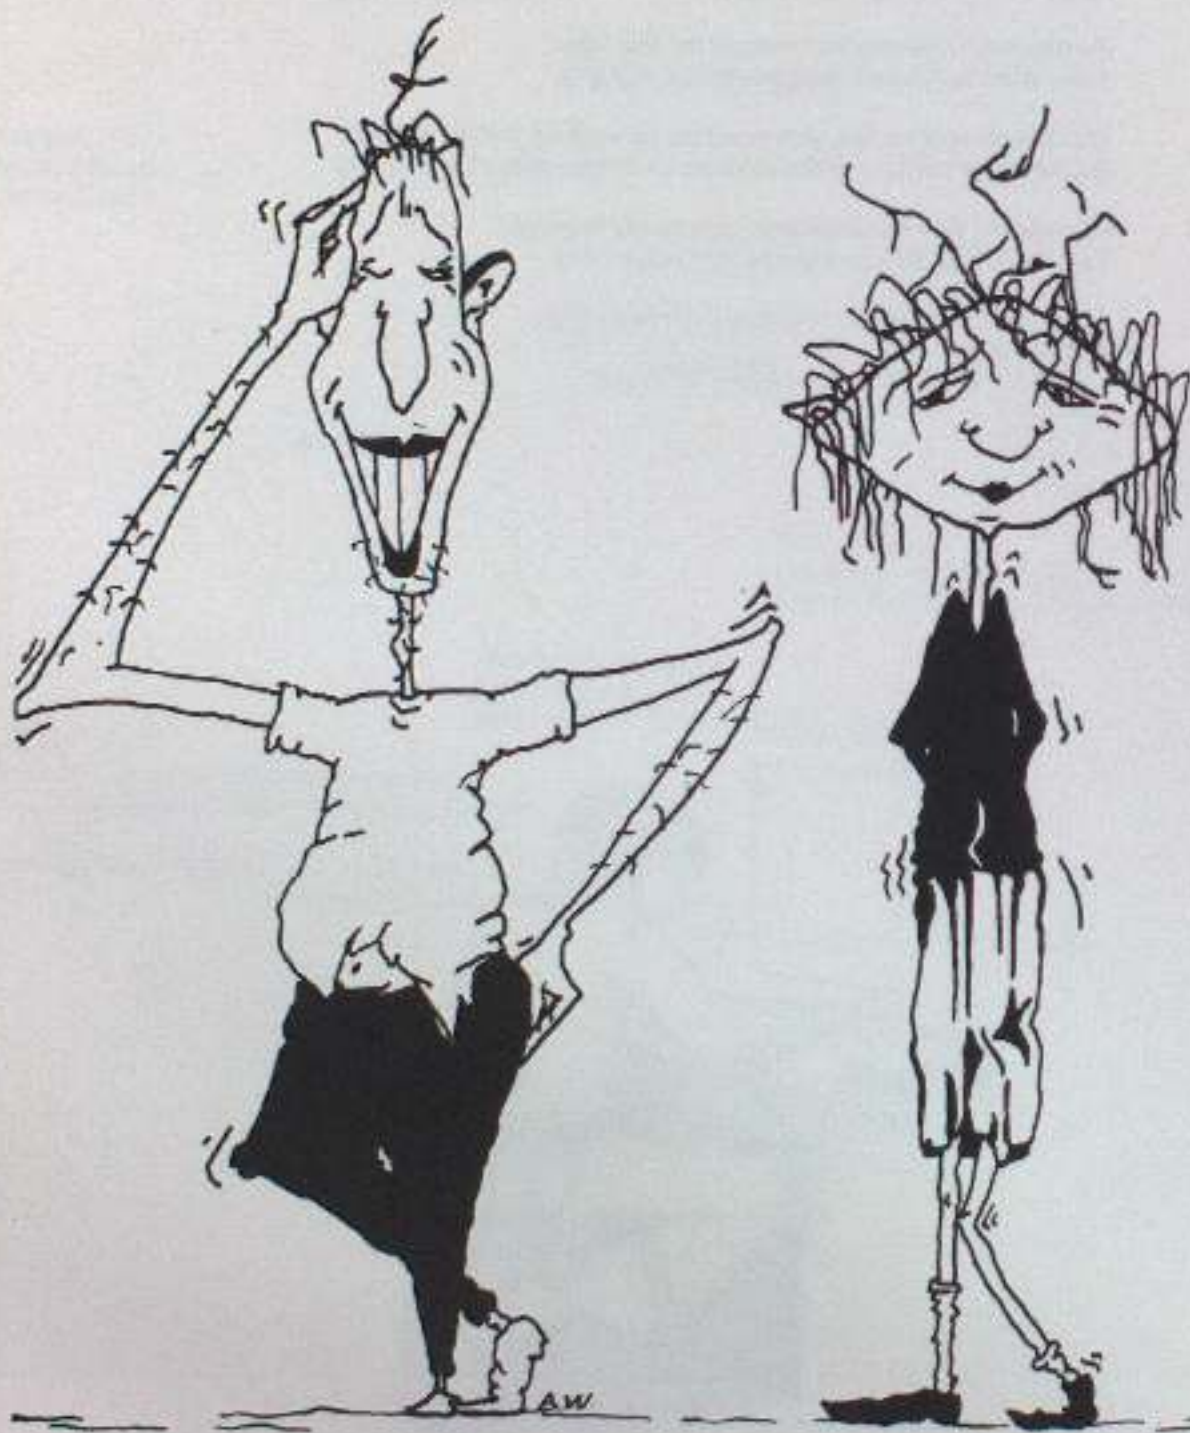

*His friends saw him kneeling, as if ready to pray;
Yet they know he's an atheist to this very day—*

*Later they wondered what had overcome Sam—
But we know—
"There are no atheists before an exam!"*

PRIME MINISTER

Jim Hamilton

Due to the efforts of a few dedicated individuals (teacher and pupil) and the general sympathy of the student body, our council was able to turn a number of potential failures into undeniable successes.

Content with the memory of our own modest accomplishments we humbly leave the task of total Establishment overthrow to future Massey governments.

Thanks to everyone for their support.

The 1977 Junior Mustangs had an outstanding year, completing the regular season undefeated, tied with Brennan. We were awarded first place over Brennan because of a better defensive record—only 14 points against, in five games. Unfortunately, we were upset in a tough semi-final against Lowe. In the accompanying photo are many fine athletes who will no doubt bring the Mustangs many trophies in the coming years.

THE MUSTANG SWIM TEAM
- 1978 EDITION

In carrying on, in Massey's finest tradition, the '78 swim team captured the all Ontario finals for the third straight year, and six of the last seven.

After winning the W.S.S.A. championship in February, and the University of Windsor Invitational in January, the girls, led by Canadian High School record holders Lori Scott, Beth Carmichael, and Jill Trotter, went on to sweep both relays at Guelph's O.F.S.A.A. Classic in Canadian record times. Lori and Beth were joined by Erin Agnew, Jane Chafe and Leslie Hapak to win the 200m free relay. They set the yards record with Sue Norquay at W.S.S.A.

At the W.S.S.A. level the team was led by the above girls and Ron Ford, who set a record in the 50 yards freestyle.

A fine year for an exceptionally fine team. Congratulations from coaches L. Pocock and J. Schroeder.

Editorial

As the end of this school year approaches we reach a time in our lives when important decisions for our future must be made and the past seems to be of little importance. However, there will be a time when we will want to look back. This edition of Pegasus will help us recall the enjoyable years at Massey.

As editors working on this yearbook, we have experienced some difficulties in putting together a collection of the year's happenings, but these difficulties have been far out-weighted by the good memories we have. In future years these memories will show us how our High School career helped prepare us for the future. We hope that this yearbook will serve the same purpose for others.
