Administration

Mr. D. Mallender
Our Principal

Mr. P. Valentine

Vincent Massey Secondary School is filled with infectious enthusiasm, resulting from the combined efforts of students, parents, teachers, and custodians.

There is a great deal of pride reflected in all activities and "I care" attitude has made Massey a fine school with an enviable tradition.

I am pleased to be part of this total environment when cooperation, learning, and maturing lead to success.

People often forget that freedom is earned as the result of responsible actions, requiring honest effort and a positive outlook.

If Massey students continue to strive for this goal, we will not only have a better school but a stronger society.

P. Valentine

JUNIOR POETRY-SECOND
FOOTPRINTS IN THE SAND

I remember a long time back,
When I was just a child,
That God could look down on this earth,
And when He did He smiled,
But all those days have come and gone,
Just moments of the past,
I wanted them to stay fore'er,
But how long did they last?
When I was only a young boy,
This world was blessed with peace,
But now that these hard times have come,
Those days are memories,
Today love's a forsaken word,
Something to be forgot,
But don't you people realize
That love cannot be bought?
I look back at my younger days,
Just footprints in the sand,
When peace and love were found in us,
And man lived hand in hand,
But we're entrapped by hatred's chains,
And hate has nearly won,
We can conquer it if we try,
Can't you folks see the sun?
Remembering the days and the years,
When life was not all bad,
We overcame all our hardships,
And people were not sad,
But all those days have long since left,
They've drifted with the wind,
Now we people can start again,
Will you let peace begin?
I imagine my childhood days,
As if they were today,
But now I realize that hate
Has washed that love away,
Peace is one of the treasured hopes
That we cannot neglect,
Don't you people see that this love
Is worthy to protect?
Tracing back my peaceful childhood,
When peace controlled our hearts,
But today is a different time,
Men and love are now apart,
Hatred has conquered this world's truth,
It's captured human minds,
But we must carry on the search
For the hope we shall find.

JUNIOR POETRY-FIRST

Time is a persevering impediment within the channels of Life.
It symbolizes age,
yet there are those who are ageless.
It is the essence of nostalgia, but some of us would rather forget.
By the time we are able to accept it,
Our wisdom is clearly defined by the lines on our face.

JUNIOR PROSE-FIRST
 WHAT EVIL LURKS IN
 THE HEARTS OF MEN

The heartless waves pounded against the rocky shore with unrelenting spite. The air was bitter and a cold wind had tossed her wavy hair into a helpless tangle. Chilled by the raw twilight temperatures, she buttoned her jacket and hugged her arms in vain pursuit of warmth. But she did not move. Instead, she stood watching the enraged sea while its lethal arms strangled a tiny sail boat nary a mile out. Just stood. Why should she help them? Their pain was far less than hers! And their loss could be replaced...

The day seemed hazy in her memory, or maybe a trifle fogged-up that day he had said good-bye. Good-bye sure, but forever? How could that be when here he was, standing so close? And where had he gone? She racked her brain in near desperation, trying to organize her thoughts. Oh yes, she remembered. It was only TOO clear; life getting him down, wanted a change of pace. Only she knew better - there was someone new, she had been replaced. She thought dreamily of his serene blue eyes, and his tender lips enveloping hers with a flame of passion. But just a dream. He was gone and gone for good.

Now eight months later, she lived in vengeful hate. Her friends had long since deserted their acts of sympathy and consolation - they were only too tired of her spiteful aggression. So she sat home alone or came down to this beach and watched the seething sea. Perhaps it gave her a bit of satisfaction to see something malicious as herself...

Far out in the bitter sea the unceasing wall grew dim and a defeated sloop surrendered to the prevailing black. As it did so, she turned and slowly walked back to her car. When she reached the door, she turned and gave a hideous chuckle toward the dominant conqueror.

By Shannon O'Connor

SENIOR PROSE - FIRST

ORDEAL

The blindfold slowly drew over his eyes and was knotted tightly at the back. That blackness. That horrible, maddening black. Peer into it though he may, he could not see. It was like looking down the deepest of pits, into the largest of caverns, or up at the darkest of cloudy winter nights.

Why did they have to blindfold you? What were they afraid you might see? Was it something you might see just before... just before...

He refused to think about it.

"So this is how it ends up," he thought. He imagined the three Fates of ancient Greece. He could see their faces grinning maniacally at him. They knew his fate. They knew.

He had seen it happen to the Others. It had looked so easy; quick and easy; not lingering, waiting, waiting, waiting...

But what was this? He was spinning, experiencing vertigo, almost losing his balance. As if his poor tortured mind was not confused enough.

Now his concept of time was distorted. What was a second, a minute, or a century, for that matter? All he knew was that his time was infinitely longer than the Others had been.

Yet that noise. His ears were now his most binding link with the rest of the world. That noise told him his time was drawing near.

It was Time.

It did not take long.

Immediately, it was over.

An ominous silence prevailed. What had just happened was a rarity. It couldn't happen, they told themselves. It mustn't happen, they told themselves.

The facts were clear: it had happened.

Johnny had pinned the tail on the donkey.

PEACE - AT LAST

I can see it again
In the sands of time
As it comes to haunt me
Through the memoirs of my mind.
The scattered bodies,
The blood-soaked ground,
The screams have been silenced -
There's not a sound.
Their weapons now useless
Are emptied and stilled,
The enemy's finished --
Their purpose fulfilled.
They fought for their freedom
Which to them was their right -
But what good is freedom
When you die in the fight?
The killing was senseless,
They all died in vain.
It was good versus evil
But it all seemed the same;
For I was a child,
A boy - not a man,
To them as a child
I could not understand.
For the games of war
We played day by day
Was no more a game
But a reality.
They fought in our meadow
As we once longed --
Except our sticks are now guns,
And our stones are now bombs.
The game's now a battle,
The fun's turned to hate,
The war's almost over
I know now their fate.
The men have all died,
The war has ceased
Maybe now alone
I can live in peace.

LET ME BE!

Let me be, I want to scream and cry,
I can never be you, nor do I want to try
You who seems to be so perfect,
Yet you jeer, tease and hurt me.
Is this the foulness you want me to taste
Or is it my tears trickling down my face.
Am I so different from you I ask
Or do you enjoy the deplorable task
My hand of friendship I stretch out to you
I beg you now to give your hand too
It is not only just for me, can you not see
It is for all mankind who cannot flee
The injustices done by us everyday
Will in our near future to our dismay
Become the loss of those we love
Because there is no longer a peace dove
So hear my pleas, as I say
Let me be, for always.

THE PRIZE

you play the game well my friend you win the silver star and with such talent in the game of life i expect you shall go far

so take the prize
it's yours
your ego can't get any higher but i shall be the last to congratulate you on winning the prize for best liar!

Editorial

In the absence of an editor this year, I am taking this opportunity to write the closing words of this Yearbook. First, I would like to thank the Yearbook Staff who remained faithful to the end in completing the layouts, especially Brenda Gardiner, Leslie Littlewood, Rosemary Bastien, Mandy Chepeka, Marilyn Mason, and Cathy Botek. I would also thank the camera club people, including Mr. Gault, for their efforts on our behalf and Mr. Sokol and his advertising group, especially Kathy Ives.

Missed deadlines and other problems plagued the Yearbook work this year, but I hope in the end the finished product will make up for the inconvenience.
